Project Title:	Cities of migration. Theorizing the diversity of (migration-related) diversities.
Abstract:	Cities of migration face increasingly ‘floating populations’ and a growing complexity of migration-related diversity, described also as ‘superdiversity.’ However, there is ‘no one size fits all.’ There will be superdiverse cities, but also multicultural cities, gateway cities, divided cities, expat cities, and many other types. Different types of migration-related diversity can also have different governance implications, both for the governance of diversity in cities (such as integration) as well as for the development of urban identities. This project aims to develop a better theoretical and empirical understanding of different types of migration-related diversity in cities and the implications for urban governance and for urban identities. It consists of three parts. First, conceptualizing and mapping different types of migration-related diversity. Secondly, studying and theorizing implications for urban governance. Finally, analysing the relationship between types of diversity and urban identities. The project currently focuses on cities in Europe and in India, and seeks to expand to a global level. This includes East-Asian cities (China, Japan, Indonesia), African cities, and N/S-American Cities. Candidates for this project will be expected to work within a team, so that insights from studies of cities in different parts of the world can be integrated in one theoretical narrative on cities of migration. Also, variation is possible on an individual level as for what aspect of urban diversity is highlighted. The project will be supervised by Prof.dr. Peter Scholten, who is Professor Migration and Diversity Policies (www.peterscholten.eu). Also, he is director of IMISCOE, Europe’s largest academic research network on International migration, Integration and Social Cohesion in Europe (www.imiscoe.org), and coordinator of several international research projects such as CrossMigration (www.migrationresearch.com).

Requirements of candidate:	Background: Master degree in relevant discipline (such as sociology, urban geography, public administration, political sciences), by preference also with some focus on issues of migration &amp; diversity. Master degree: Yes Erasmus School of Social and Behavioural Sciences - English requirement: IELTS: 7.5                      or                      TOEFL: 100 (internet) (min. 6.0 for all subs.)    or 600 (paper)
